How to conceptualize antisemitism, racism, and the relation between antisemitism and (other) racism(s) in light of their historical and present trajectories and entanglements, is a contested topic in a series of fields, from history and sociology to philosophy. In this seminar, we will explore this complex and contested relation by engaging with both classical and contemporary contributions from a philosophical and socio-theoretical perspective.

Concluding Discussion

All readings will be made available as pdf files via Blackboard.

Assessment/Requirements:

- Careful study of the assigned readings, active participation class discussion and online discussion forums, and regular attendance of seminar meetings (please note that you are expected to communicate absences beforehand).
- For at least 4 sessions of your choice you are expected to make substantial contributions to the discussion forum on Blackboard; these can take a variety of forms including, but not limited to, posting (non-trivial) questions about the readings, answering questions others have posted, commenting on the readings and their strengths and shortcomings, discussing an example related to the readings, making connections etc.
- Final paper (ca. 5000-7500 words, depending on the requirements of the module you are taking; first outline (on which you will receive feedback) due February 28, 2025, final version due March 31, 2025, both via email).
- The final grade is based on the paper.
- As a member of the campus community you should see yourself as sharing a commitment to mutual respect and constructive engagement in classroom discussions as well as academic integrity and fairness. Any form of plagiarism is incompatible with such a commitment, and will result in the student failing the assignment.
- For some further information on how to write final papers in philosophy, see:
